Claude

In the name of our recent friendship I write these lines, and not in the name of our recent friendship alone, but in the name of friendship now, I send you this note. I do not know what your feelings towards me may be, but my feelings toward you are only the kindest and best, intertwined with deep regret. I regret that a friendship, so close as ours had been should be so rudely broken and for a cause so utterly insignificant and trivial. But more

0107

more than all I regret the encounter of Wednesday night.

Last Sunday night I was thinking seriously over this affair, and a wave of the most sympathetic and gentle feelings came over me when I thought of how you had been in hazard, luck so long, and then to meet with this last disaster. I felt too, that I had something to be very, very thankful for, and, (I say it without shame) I knelt down and prayed an earnest prayer, a prayer of thankfulness that at the bar of no tribunal, below or above, will I have to answer for your life, yet it might have been.

I have received letters from a couple of friends who told me they have talked with you about this affair, and that you had not expressed yourself bitterly against me. They advised me, therefore, to write you a letter with the object of a friendly settlement. On that point I have only this to say: If you come and prosecute I must abide the issue of the trial. If, however, you do not come, you will place me under a life long obligation to you, and it will be a step which, I shall see, that you will never regret. "But truth has better deeds than words to grace it."

0109

Inclosed you will find a note for Miss Butte.
I hope you will have no scruples about taking the article I offer you.
I know your circumstances, and I feel ~~anxious~~ sorry about this affair of ours. I hope your wound is doing well.
I am as ever your friend Fred Jacobs.

a sentence of 10 days today.
