FRIGHTFUL POLICE OUTRAGE.

World Friday April 20th 1888

A Boy Horribly Beaten Without Cause by a Brutal Policeman.

Locked Up in a Cell with a Broken Nose and a Broken Arm and Medical Attendance Refused Him.

In the Yorkville Police Court yesterday morning a pale, slight youth of nineteen, with a broken nose and his arm in a sling, was arraigned before Justice Murray. He was charged by policeman Meyer, of the Nineteenth Precinct (a stalwart fellow weighing about 250 pounds), with interfering with an officer in the performance of his duty. According to the policeman's story, while conveying to the station-house Charles Peyson and Edward Holbeck, for an assault on William May, the youth, who gave his name as John T. O'Rourke, of No. 208 East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth street, tried to rescue one of the prisoners, whom he seized by the arm. The policeman testified that when he ordered O'Rourke to desist, the latter refused and told him to "Go to H—l"; and he then ran after O'Rourke and, accidentally stumbling, fell upon the boy, thus causing his injuries. He exhibited a rent in his trousers which he said was made in the struggle. Young O'Rourke told a very different story, which was corroborated by a number of witnesses.

"I went down Third avenue," he said, "about 8 o'clock last evening, to see some friends in the house where we formerly lived. Near the corner of Fifty-first street I met one of my friends and stopped to speak to him. Just then Policeman Meyer and another policeman came along with their two prisoners. A crowd followed and surrounded them. As they came opposite where we were standing Officer Meyer struck one of the prisoners across the knees with his locust, because he stumbled. Somebody in the crowd called out: 'Oh, you cowardly Dutch brute.' This was repeated, with other indecent epithets, by other persons in the crowd. Officer Meyer, in a great passion, handed his prisoner over to the other policeman and dashed into the crowd, which scattered, leaving me behind. Pouncing upon me, the policeman raised his club, and crying: 'You will call me names, will you?' aimed a terrific blow at my head. I put my left arm up just in time, and the blow, instead of breaking my head, broke my arm. I was completely taken by surprise and told him he was wrong, that I had not called him names; but before I could say this much he struck me another blow with his club across the nose, breaking it at the bridge and nearly putting out one of my eyes. I had never seen the prisoners before in my life and do not know the persons who called the policeman names. I did not fall and I did not see the officer fall, nor did I strike him or tear his clothes."

Justice Murray discharged the complaint, saying that according to the officer's own story he was not justified in making the arrest.

To a reporter of The World young O'Rourke said that a lady living near the station-house witnessed the assault and cried out, "For God's sake, don't kill the boy." This lady immediately went to Dr. Oppenheimer and brought him to the station-house, but they were refused admittance. Sergeant Woodruff held O'Rourke and he was consigned to a cell. There he suffered intense pain from his broken arm, and his nose bled so profusely that his clothing became thoroughly saturated. In answer to his repeated request a surgeon was sent for, who arrived about two hours afterwards and dressed his injuries. About 11 o'clock his father arrived and bail'd him out. Dr. Little, his family physician, who set the broken elbow and nose, said the boy would be under treatment for about ten weeks.

A complaint, attested by seven witnesses, will be laid before the Police Commissioners by the boy's father, who will also prosecute Officer Meyer in the courts.

The officer was dismissed from the Police force on this charge. Was indicted last fall, but has not been tried.

This officer was subsequently prosecuted before Justice Power, by Peter Marshall and was committed for trial.
