-----X
ANNIE BROWN, called by the people, being duly sworn, testified that she took in washing, for the last eight years. She lived at No. 222 Sullivan street. On the 17th of June, 1892, she joined an excursion. She got on the barge at the foot of Eleventh street, and the North river. The barge went up the Hudson river.

The people on the barge were half white and half black, as near as she could judge. She, the witness, was dancing in a set, when the defendant Mrs. Earl, came to her and asked her for the loan of half a dollar. She, the witness, said she did not have it. The defendant swore at her once or twice, and said that she, the witness, did have it. She, the witness, said she did not have it and that a lady friend had her pocket-book, with her change in it. The defendant gave her, the witness, a shove, and ran her, the defendant's, hand, behind her and pulled a knife and cut her, the witness, in the face. The blood squirted out at first, but it was stopped with handkerchiefs and towels, and she walked down stairs. She, the witness, asked the defendant why she cut her, the witness, as they had been good friends. The defendant's mother threw a big beer glass, at her, the witness, and started the blood. Then she, the witness, saw the defendant fly through the crowd. The assault occurred in the neighborhood of 42nd street, on the New York side of the river. They landed at Eleventh street. The people did not wait for the gang plank to be thrown over, but hoisted her, the witness, over. When the defendant came out there were a couple of ladies with her, the defendant, and there was a large mantle over her, the defendant's, head. The defendant started to run. She, the witness, was afraid to go anywhere near the defendant, because she was afraid the defendant would cut her again. She, witness, ran to the street. The defendant knew she, the witness, was going to follow her, and threw a half pint bottle down the sewer, and said that if she, the defendant, was going to be locked up, she, the witness, would be locked up too. An officer came, and she, the witness, pointed the defendant out to him. The officer took her, the witness, to the station house, and then to the hospital, where the wound on her forehead was treated and she went home. The wound was not very large, but it was deep and very painful. She, the witness, and the defendant, never had a word before in their lives. If she, the witness, had had the money, she would have loaned it to the defendant. Before she, the witness, went on the excursion, she had not seen the defendant for two or three weeks. What little money she, the witness, had that day was about a dollar. It was in Estelle Brown's possession. Mamie Johnson was dancing in her, the witness's, set. She, the witness, had not seen Mamie since the cutting, which was a week or more ago. She, the witness, knew Rosie Stells, but had no trouble of any kind with Rosie. The defendant was the only one on the excursion with whom she, the witness, had any trouble.

G E O R G E J A S P E R, being duly sworn, testified that he lived at No. 103 Macdougall street. He was on the excursion, on the 17th of June. He was dancing with Annie Brown, the complainant. All that he knew was that he saw the defendant ask Annie Brown for 50 cents, and Annie said she did not have it. The defendant shoved the complainant. The defendant had a handkerchief in her hand and he saw the blade of a knife. He did not see what the defendant did with the knife but she ran away, after she had cut the complainant with it. He, the witness, worked for blacksmith in 15th street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, and had worked there for eight years.

J O S E P H W A L E S, being duly sworn, testified that he was on the excursion on the 17th of June. He saw the trouble between Annie Brown and Mamie Earl. He saw the defendant ask the complainant for 50 cents, and heard the complainant say she did not have it and another lady had her, the complainant's, money. The defendant told the complainant she lied and did have the money. The defendant put her hand in her pocket and came out with a handkerchief and went at the complainant's face, and he, the witness, saw the complainant was cut over the eye. He, the witness, was dancing with Rosie Stells. He had known Annie Brown for three or four years. He had known the defendant since he was six or seven years old.

J O H N J . F L Y N N , being duly sworn, testified that he was a policeman of the Ninth Precinct. On the evening of the 17th of June, he arrested both the defendant and her mother, at Eleventh street and West street. He was patrolling West street. He saw a commotion and a crowd and made the arrests. The defendant denied cutting the complainant. He, the witness, and Officer O'Leary took the defendant and her mother and the complainant, to the station house, where the complainant made a charge against the defendant of assaulting her, and he, the witness, took the complainant to the hospital to have her wounds dressed.

M A M I E E A R L, the defendant, being called by the defense, and duly sworn, testified that she was married for two years. Her husband worked for J. V. P. Deck, oysterman, at the foot of Bloomfield street. Her husband was foreman. Her mother went with her, the defendant, on the excursion. She, the defendant, had known Annie Brown for two years. She had never had any trouble with Annie Brown. She, the defendant, did not pull out a knife and jab the complainant in the forehead. Her, the defendant's, mother, and herself, left their house at 7:30 o'clock. She, the defendant, had just got out of a sick bed. Her mother suggested going down to see the excursion off. At the foot of Thirty-fourth street, a lady friend invited them to go on the excursion on her family ticket. The barges were fastened together. Going up the river, she, the defendant, met Annie Brown on the barge and Annie asked her to have a glass of beer. Then she invited the complainant to drink with her, the defendant. Rosie Stells and Miss Johnson came up to the complainant and Rosie said she had lost the $15 and the complainant said Rosie had no right to take it out. She, the defendant went over to her mother. The complainant called her back, and asked her if she would go to bed with her, the complainant, when they reached New York, and have intercourse with her. She, the defendant told the complainant that she would have no intercourse with a woman, because she had a husband. The complainant thrust her, the defendant, away from her. She, the witness, told the complainant that she, the complainant was drunk. The complainant got off at Eleventh street, and commenced to curse, and went to her, the defendant's mother and said her mother hit her, the complainant, with a glass, and that she, the defendant, cut her with a knife. The complainant did not say in the station house that she, the complainant, wanted to borrow from her. She, the defendant, had no need to borrow from anyone, as she worked two days out of the week. She, the defendant, did not have a knife. Her, the defendant's mother, was discharged in the police court, by Justice Grady, and she, the defendant, was held. She, the defendant, had known Jasper since he was a baby. She never had any trouble with him. The reason Jasper came to court to testify against her, was that the complainant paid him to do so. Her, the defendant's, husband, forbid her going on the excursion, and she went against his wishes. She lived at No. 210 Thirtieth street. If she, the defendant, had done what she was accused of, she would have given the court no trouble whatever, because she would have taken a plea. She knew about the plea because she was arrested once before about four years ago, and she pleaded to receiving stolen goods. She was single at that time. Her sentence was six months in the penitentiary. She never assaulted anybody before. On the excursion she, the defendant, did not drink so much as to let it turn her crazy.

M A R Y M E R S A L L I A, being duly sworn, testified that the defendant was her daughter. She, the witness, was downstairs on the barge, when someone came down and told her that her daughter, the defendant, and Annie Brown were quarrelling upstairs. Before the defendant came downstairs she was told this. Then Mamie came down and sat along side of her, the witness, on the lower deck. She, the witness, told her daughter not to mess any more with those people and the defendant said she was not going to. At Eleventh street, Annie Brown came downstairs with her head cut. She, the witness, went for an officer, and Annie Brown told the officer that the defendant had cut her, the complainant, and she, the witness, had hit her, the complainant, with a glass.

 he visited said room and behind a partition, saw defendant that upon the walls of said room were affixed blackboard upon which were written names and figures which were that from various newspapers published in the
