CHARLES GUTTERMANN.

O N the further examination of detective Kush in this case, I find that when he arrested the defendant he learned in a conversation with him, from his own admissions, that he had purchased an overcoat IN THIS CITY, on the corner of Broadway & Bleecker St., after receiving Mr. Wassermann's money that was to have been expended in his service. The trouble about this case is the absence of evidence to convict the defendant of criminal conduct in this State, as it would seem he appropriated the cigars in Massachusetts. Mr. Wassermann will testify that in addition to the $30. he gave to the defendant to pay his travelling expenses, he also paid him $15. , which was then due him for past services, rendered in his employment at 301 Broadway. He will also prove that defendant told him he always gave that $15. to his mother for her support, it being his regular wages. He does not say that defendant ever admitted to him that he had given the last $15. paid to him to his mother. Whether he did pay that $15. to his mother or not, becomes a material fact in this prosecution, because if he did, then the money with which he purchased the overcoat was complainant's money and he was guilty of its misappropriation in this city, and so so soon after receiving it from complainant that it must raise the presumption that he received it , as well as the cigars, with the premeditated purpose of appropriating it and then to his own use. This state of facts seems to suggest an indispensable necessity for the evidence of his mother to prove whether he did, or did not, pay to her that $15, which it is not probable she will ever admit, if she gets the remotest hint of what she will be summoned to prove, and if she is summoned, and is put on the stand, and asked the question of how much money of his last receipt of wages he gave to her before leaving for Boston, his counsel will object to the question as irrelevant, and I would suggest, if he does, that the Assistant District Attorney, who may be trying the case, shall move the removal of the witness beyond the hearing of the proceedings to enable him to make such an explanation to the Court as will make the question a proper one and secure the ruling of the Court in favor of the admission of the answer. This has frequently happened in important causes, both civil and criminal, and may become indispensibly necessary to the vindication of innocence, the punishment of crime, the ascertainment of the truth and the maintainance of justice. Possibly it would be as well not even to summon defendant's mother until the trial commences, and then bring her into court too suddenly and promptly to permit her to be coached. WasserMann will show, from defendant's admissions, that he commenced smoking his cigars before he left the State, which is another strong circumstance going to prove the animus of the scapegrace when he received them. He will also prove that to induce him to send defendant on this mission he stated to him that he had certain friends and customers in Boston whose patronage he could secure for complainant. Now, Wassermann says defendant's uncle told him that those names he had given as his customers, or friends, were people he had never seen and did not know, but that he got these names from his books (the uncle's books) and that defendant admits that when he went to Boston he did not go to see one of these said customers or friends. The circumstance that the defendant appropriated half of the funds given to him by complainant to pay his expences, to his own use before he left the city, clearly shows that he received said cigars with the intention of selling them instead of exhibiting them as samples to assist him in making sales of other cigars, because he knew that the amount of money he would have left after purchasing said overcoat, would be insufficient to defray his expenses the length of time he had contracted to be absent. It would seem that the defendant never intended to use those cigars as samples, for he commenced smoking them before he left the city, as sundry witnesses will prove, and sold them IMMEDIATELY upon his arrival in Boston.

CHARLES GUTMANN

E X A M I N A T I O N of the complainant, B. WASSERMANN,

Q Was defendant in your employment before you sent him to Boston ?

A He was, at $15. per week, which wages he told me he had to pay to his mother to support the family, as they w were very poor, and at the same time, to-wit on the 10th of December last, I delivered to him $30. to pay his incidental expenses to Boston for ten days - I also paid him fifteen dollars I then owed him for his last week's services, which he separated from the $30. I gave him as aforesaid, and put in a different pocket, remarking at the same time that he must give that to his mother that very night.

Q Did he have any other means, or sources of revenue, known to you.

A He told me he had none.

Q Did he make any purchases in this city of clothing or any other articles between the payment by you, on the 10th of Dec., of $30. to pay his expenses to Boston on Dec.
10th, and his departure for that place ?

A He purchased an overcoat which must have cost some $15.

Q When did he contract with you to leave for Boston ?

A On December 10th.

POOR QUALITY

- Q. Did he leavr for Boston on Dec. 10. ?
- A. He did not , for the reason, he said, that the boat did not leave.
- Q. Was he to leave by the boat ?
- A. No.
- Q. Could he not have left by the Rail-Road on Dyc. 10. ?
- A. Yes, and finally did go that route on Dec. 12th.
- Q. How did you come to employ him to go to Boston to sell your cigars ?
- A. Because of his persistent importunities, and his representations that he had a long line of good customers there embracing at least twenty of the best wholesale jobbers in that business in Boston, to whom he said he had frequently sold large bills , and in fact, he made it a point to tell me that he never visited Boston without selling them more or less goods. I took his Catalogue of names, and investigated their standing, and business reputation and finding that first class I determined to accept his proposition, and send him with some samples of my goods.
- Q. Did you ask him whether he was, or was not, personally acquainted with these firms and could, or could not, secure their patronage ?
- A. I did, and he said he was , and could, and in that connection informed me that he had often visited Boston to sell such goods, and never failed to make liberal sales to these firms.
- Q. Were these representations true ?
- A. No. I subsequently learned from his uncle Leo Schwab, who is in the cigar business in this city that these names he had given were his customers, and that while he had defendant in his employment, he did send him once, but only once, to Boston, and that he made no sales.

Q. Did defendant ever attempt to sell these goods to your customers ?

A. NNo, he told me that he was foolish and did not go near them. Seeming to reflect, however, that this was a lame excuse, he then pretended that the cigars were stolen from him, which explanation he abandoned by an admission to Simon Greenhood that he had sold the samples and spent the money, all of which is in consonance with the character given him by David M. Newberger, who told me that he was known as boquet Charley, and that he had served out a sentence for his unfortunate connection with a diamond robbery.

CHARLES W. STORRS EXAMINED.

SIMON GREENHOOD EXAMINED.

Q. Have you recently held any conversation with the defendant.

A. Yes, I called to see him at Mr. Wassermann's request, at his father's house, and the moment he saw me he cautioned me not to speak loud, and when I told him Mr. Wassermann wanted him to call to see him, he remarked, If he wanted to make any trouble about those cigars, he might go ahead, as he could do nothing with him outside of the State of Massachusetts

SIMON GREENWOOD E X A M I N E D.

- Q. Do you know defendant ?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Have you held any conversation with him recently.
- A. Yes.
- Q. What about ?
- A. Well, he simply told me after his return from Boston, some six weeks ago that he had sold the samples delivered by Mr. Wassermann to him to take with him to Boston, and had spent the money, and that's all I know about it.

JOSEPH SAMONFOLD E X A M I N E D.

- Q. What do you know about the circumstances under which defendant was sent to Boston ?
- A. All I know is, that he was very anxious to go and begged me to do all I could with Mr. Wassermann to induce him to send him to Boston. - He stated he had a big trade there among first class customers, a long list of whose names he exhibited, and to whom he said he always could make sales.

Mr. Schwab voluntarily called and in the course of a conversation, stated he never had sent defendant to Boston but once, and that he then had made no sales. He complained bitterly, however, that Wassermann had taken advantage of this boy's knowledge of his list of patrons in Boston and had attempted through him to get them away from him, to which Wassermann answers, the boy claimed them as his customers, which it seems was false.

CHARLES KUSH E X A M I N E D.

- Q. What is your business ?
- A. Detective.
- Q. Do you know defendant ?
- A. Yes, I arrested him.
- Q. Did you have any conversation with him at that time ?
- A. Very little.
- Q. Did you hear him state where he bought that overcoat ?
- A. Yes, in this city, on the corner of Broadway & Bleecker.
- Q. Did you ask him no questions at all about his trip to Boston ?
- A. Yes, I asked him what he did with the goods Mr. Wasserman had entrusted to him as samples, and he said that he delivered them to a man he found in front of his hotel in Boston to take to the Cambridge Depot, and that when he got to the depot he found neither the cigars nor the man, there, and never saw either of them afterwards. I asked him if reported those facts to the police in Boston, He said no - I then asked him if he reported them to Mr. Wassermann, and he said no. He said he had spent the money Mr. Wassermann gave him to pay his expenses for ten days.

Mr.. Wassermann seems unable to produce the witnesses by whom he expected to prove that defendant commenced smoking and giving away his cigars before he left the city. In a conversation with Mr. Kush, I find that it is not his opinion, from what he has seen, and knows of the defendant, that he ever contributed any portion of his wages to the support of his mother, or that he gave her any money whatever between the receipt of the payment of his wages on Dec. 10th, and his departure for Boston, and were we to prove that he had said that he gave every cent of that money to his mother without first making his mother commit herself to a corroboration of that statement in an interview with another detective to be unknown to her as such, the presumption is that she would go on the stand and swear he never had given her one cent of it, the moment her counsel could discover the importance of such testimony. It is then, for this Office to decide whether the importance of the case will justify the introduction, as a prisoner, in the same room with defendant, a shrewd detective who, by the simulation of a similar exploit in Philadelphia, or elsewhere, out of the State, should draw him out in an exchange of confidences, to say that he had given his mother that money, as doubtless he would, and the employment of another detective, a female, if you please, to get the admission from his mother that he had done so - otherwise the case must narrow itself down to the presumptions of a premeditated purpose to do exactly what he did when he received those cigars, and that money, of which we can produce only circumstantial evidence and these are the circumstances :

FIRST : his anxiety to go to Boston and the application he made to Mr. Samonfold to do all he could to induce Mr. Wassermann to send him, making to him the same false and fraudulent representations he did to Mr. Wassermann about his long list of customers there when he had not one - the frequency of his visits there on business, when he had never been there but once in his life, and the success of which he boasted in making sales to these customers, when his own uncle, Leo Schwab, stated to me that he did not make a single sale when he sent him there for that purpose the only time he ever was there.

SECOND : the circumstance that he admitted that when he got to Boston he was "foolish", as Mr. Wassermann proves, and did not go near those customers, leaves the inference legitimate that he did not intend to attempt to sell to them when he received those cigars, knowing that the only attempt he ever made to sell to them resulted in a failure, and that his sole object in making such flagrant misrepresentations as he did to complainant about his capacity to control those customers, was to secure the delivery of those cigars to him so that he could convert them to his own use and have a good time.

The THIRD circumstance which seems to conspire with the foregoing facts to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the animus that controlled his mind in the attempts he made to get possession of those cigars, is his remark to young Storrs the moment he told him Mr. Wassermann wanted to see him, which was "If he wants to make trouble about those cigars, he may go ahead, as he can do nothing with me outside of Massachusetts." Here is conclusive proof that the scamp knew the risk he would incur if he converted that property to his own use in this State and the impunity with which he could do it in another State, never dreaming in the darkness of his ignorance, that he was giving himself away by impudently parading what he supposed he knew of the law, which when coupled with his conduct, would betray the motives that inspired that conduct when he received those cigars. He, no doubt, was as subtle and wise a lawyer on the 10th of Dec., as he is now, and this remark of his referring to the jurisdiction of the courts of Massachusetts only, furnishes another illustration to be added to the millions that have already confirmed the truth of the axiom, that "A little learning is a dangerous thing". The fact that he did not make a single sale in Boston gives a criminal complexion to his whole conduct from the first and probablizes the presumption that he made no attempt to sell, for the reason that he did not obtain the goods for that purpose. Then again, the conversion must have been contemplated from the first, or he would not have gone so promptly to work in that direction immediately upon his arrival in Boston. This promptness shows it was no "new-hatched and unfledged" project of his, but was the legitimate offspring of mature and deliberate premeditation. The moment he arrived in Boston he instantly sells the cigars. What is the explanation of this hot haste? It must be his appreciation of the fact that if he was going to have a good time at Wassermann's expense he must get the sun up as quick as possible, and go to making hay at once, and he did - all of which resembles results of reflection and not of sudden impulse and returns our thoughts and suspicions to the inception of the whole programme, where I now leave it.

Newberger says he knows the reputation of defendant to be very bad
